VICTIM GETS HIS WIFE OUT OF JAIL

Forgives Her for Cutting Him With Knife and Shooting at Him

WOUNDS NOT SERIOUS

Got What Was Coming to Him He Says to Police When Her Bond Is Made

"I got just what was coming t me" D. P. Camman, cut about the face and hody Saturday night by hi wife during a fight between the pale in a room at the Waldorf rooms mid when he made three bonds of day morning for the release of his militant mate. "We had a little quarrel and I guess I got too rough with her, when she struck at me sectoral times with a exercise knife When she started furbling I didn't want to hurt her so I just let her have her way. I didn't think she would try to shoot me. But I have, no kick roming and we are going back home together." After making his wife's bond, Camman and ing his wife's bond, Camman and the woman left the station. He did not mention to the pelice the origin of the quarrel, but the wife, shortly after her arrest Saturday night told the police her husband had been on friendly terms with a woman living at another hotel and that she found her husband in the hotel and took him home a short time before the fight began in their room.

Mrs. Camman was elightly cut about the head when she fell into a five gallon water bottle in the room in an attempt to escape from the police. While running to another door away from the officers she tripped and fell head first into the bottle, shattering it to bits. Her injuries were dressed at the police station and were found to be of a minor nature, Camman, a meat cutter, employed by the King's market in this city, was first attacked by his wife, who used a knife, and she later fired one shot from a revolver at him. Cam-man succeeded in calling the police and when General Views man succeeded in calling the police and when George Hiaine, police captain, and Patrolman Bullard entered the hotel room, they found the husband in one corner with the wife attempting to fire a revolver at him. The fact that the weapon refused to function after the first shot probably saved the life of the husband.

Both were taken to the police station, and Camman made a bond of $25 for appearance in municipal court Monday to asswer the charge tion, and Camman made a bond of $25 for appearance in municipal court Monday to answer the charge of disturbance of the peace. The wife remained in jail the entire night, under charges of peace disturbance, carrying concealed weapons and intoxication. Both admitted to the police they had been drinking before the fight, in which accusations were made by the wife that Camman had been paying undue attention to another woman.

Following a heated argument. Mrs. Camman attacked her husband with a knife, inflicting several minor cuts and then obtained a revolver, with which she shot at him. The "Lapon failed to fire after the first shot and while the wife was snapping the revolver at him, Camman called the police.
